You shouldn't abandon a loyal friend

'If you need a friend, go get a pet', is the thought that comes into our minds when we seek a loyal companion. Yet, it happens on a daily basis: People abandon their pets, because they are noisy, messy, too big, or too old, causing harm both to their animal friends and society.

Firstly, domestic animals are nurtured and catered for by humans and be kept at home. Consequently, it is challenging for them to survive in the street. This is why many stray animals end up dead, injured, or suffering from malnutrition. Moreover, this tactic has become a social problem, as stray animals can be a source of pollution and disease.

Admittedly, having a pet means having a loyal friend to play with, an outlet to relax. Pets devote themselves to their owners and can even be therapeutic in cases of stress or depression. Moreover, having a pet can be a great excuse for some physical exercise for us, as many will need to take it for a walk.

Overall, I think people should reconsider how beneficial having pets is, as well as how detrimental abandoning them can be.
